

Airbus

Defence & Space

Case Study

Airbus Defence and Space creates innovative, effective space and defence solutions.

BACKGROUND

Airbus Defence and Space creates innovative, effective space and defence solutions. Airbus Group is already a leader in each domain in which it operates: it has achieved parity with Boeing in the commercial aircraft segment, is the No. 1 helicopter company in the world, the European leader in space business and second in Europe in the defence sector.

THE CHALLENGE

Airbus was looking to create a new lead-generation campaign as they wanted to rapidly grow their sales pipeline. Their brand is so heavily protected that it has been difficult to satisfactorily fulfil lead generation activities in the past.

Airbus' main priority is to keep data safe. They have a wide range of capabilities, including a SOC (Security Operations Centre), where analysts monitor their clients' networks 24/7, analysing logs and computer systems, then correlate it all, to prevent hackers disabling the systems.

Airbus wanted to target industrial and commercial companies where their ethos most resonates. For example, a cyber attack on a bank would automatically lose customers, or an attack on a petro-chemical plant would potentially shut them down. Hacking is prevalent in this day and age, with nine out of ten major companies claiming to have had at least one cyber attack.

Results

Brand and product awareness increased

A substantial sales pipeline has been created within FTSE sized companies

Successful C-Level, face-to-face appointments made with key, blue-chip customers

Commercial Aeronautics,
Defence and Space markets

www.airbusdefenceandspace.com

HQ - Toulouse, France

AIRBUS DEFENCE & SPACE

“ProspectAware have been a trusted partner in helping us engage with the right organisations. Their professionalism and results-focused approach have made a real difference to our lead generation activities.”

A targeted lead generation strategy

THE DIFFERENTIATOR

Airbus contacted ProspectAware to help with lead-generation activity as they seemed to operate in alignment with Airbus, and already had experience of campaigns in the cyber defence arena. Cyber defence is all about protecting intellectual property and data and preventing criminal activity with 'ransomware'. It's more and more complex to keep up with malware, as it grows and changes daily.

Airbus felt that ProspectAware had the skills and expertise to sell their capabilities into prospective clients. They did not simply want leads or for an agency to talk to someone to arrange for Airbus to call them back. ProspectAware's contract differentiator was that the prospective client must respond in writing by email, after a phone call, accepting a meeting request. Another huge benefit to using ProspectAware's services was that they get paid on results, not on the time spent on the phone: an added incentive for all parties.

The initial campaign was planned to target specific verticals but, after talking to several prospective clients, ProspectAware's agents realised that this is a problem that affects every sector, and one that Airbus could capitalise on.

RAPID RESULT

Airbus only needed to spend a couple of hours with ProspectAware's staff, giving them background information to the defence market, as well as any problem areas to be aware of and highlighting the benefits of Airbus's services to potential clients.

The lead generation campaign began in May 2015 and it was fully operational by June. Airbus was very impressed with ProspectAware's work, and pleased with the quality of the meetings that they booked. They targeted the right companies but most importantly, the right level of seniority, such as CISOs (Chief Information Security Officers).

ProspectAware could develop meaningful conversations, understanding enough about the market, technology and solutions to interest the prospects to want more in-depth, technical information from a face-to-face meeting.

It was transparent to the prospects that ProspectAware were calling on behalf of Airbus, as a third party. They made it very clear how Airbus could help them, pushing the benefits of outsourcing cyber security, and how they ultimately needed to trust such an organisation, if they were to have their security infrastructure safely protected.

$80

return for every $1 spent

Goals and Objectives

Rapidly increase sales pipeline growth

Arrange meetings with senior security executives

Solution

Consultants trained to understand core services and Airbus's unique sales proposition

Database of enterprise-sized prospects created

Focused accounts. Better conversations. Faster pipeline growth.

Promising results.

Strong conversion.

Over the past year, ProspectAware has helped accelerate Airbus Defence and Space's growth into new markets. The campaign delivered a consistent stream of high-quality meetings with target organisations, giving Airbus greater visibility, valuable conversations and a stronger sales pipeline.

55+

companies met from 350+ direct targets

Why ProspectAware?

Cyber-defence campaign experience

Written meeting acceptance

Results-based commercial model

Senior decision-maker targeting

Strict brand-guideline alignment

Commercial Aeronautics,
Defence and Space markets

www.airbusdefenceandspace.com

HQ – Toulouse, France

“ProspectAware are always very professional and friendly when they speak to prospective clients, staying within Airbus’ strict brand guidelines. Our aim is to help stop our customers being hacked, but also analyse the forensic information if they are hacked.”

Victor Start

Sales Lead, Airbus Defence and Space

“In a short space of time, ProspectAware were able to get us meetings with more than 55 companies from a list of over 350 direct targets. This is a good conversion rate within our marketplace.”

Ben Vaughan

Marketing Manager, Airbus Defence and Space

Professional delivery. Campaign visibility. Pipeline impact.